

Two Lists Separated By Prose

The first procedure has the following steps:

1. Initialize the system before starting the run.
2. Run the main computation loop to completion.

Between the two lists sits this ordinary paragraph of body prose, which must remain its own paragraph and never be swallowed into the list above.

A second, unrelated procedure has its own steps:

1. Validate the computed results for correctness.
2. Report the final summary output to the user.