

LEFTONE Reading order in a two-column layout must follow each column from top to bottom before crossing to the next column, which this fixture checks.

LEFTTWO The second left-column paragraph continues with ordinary body prose so the left column has a clear and substantial vertical extent on the page.

LEFTTHREE The third left-column paragraph closes this side of the page before the reader crosses the central gutter into the right-hand column of text.

RIGHTONE The right column is read only after the entire left column has been consumed, the precise reading-order property that this fixture is verifying.

RIGHTTWO The second right-column paragraph adds more flowing body prose to keep the two columns close in height and the central gutter clearly empty.

RIGHTTHREE The final right-column paragraph ends the page with further plain sentences so neither column is unusually short relative to the other one.